

Our Work Family

As the holiday season approaches, we're reminded of the warmth and connection that comes with time spent with loved ones. For many of us, though, our work family often becomes just as integral to our lives as our families at home. At Kimal Lumber, this sentiment rings true every day, but it's particularly felt during the festive season.

Think about it: most of us spend 40 or more hours each week with our colleagues. That's more time than many of us get with our families, especially in the hustle of balancing work, home, and the holiday frenzy. Over time, our coworkers become confidants, supporters, and sometimes even therapists...lol. These relationships shape our workdays and bring a sense of camaraderie that helps us tackle challenges together.

The holidays amplify this dynamic. We're not just co-workers navigating through quotes and orders—we're teammates bringing extra warmth to the workplace. Whether you are decorating the office, participating in Secret Santa exchanges, or just sharing a quick laugh over a holiday treat, these small moments remind us how important our work family is in creating a supportive, enjoyable environment.

But the holiday season also gives us a chance to reflect on what these relationships mean. Are we showing our appreciation for the people we see every day? Are we taking a moment to express gratitude for their contributions, humor, and support? It's easy to overlook these connections when we're caught up in the everyday grind, but the holidays are a perfect time to acknowledge them.

At Kimal Lumber, our work family plays an essential role in not just providing great products, but in building a great culture. As we approach the end of the year, let's remember to celebrate the connections we've forged and the countless ways we've supported one another. Whether it is through a holiday lunch, a simple thank-you, or just being present for each other, let us make the season meaningful in the place where we spend so much of our time.

After all, family isn't always about who you go home to, it's about the people who make you feel at home, wherever you are.

From all of us at Kimal Lumber.... Here's to a season of gratitude, joy, and connection. Let's cherish both our families at home and the one we've created here at work.

Happy Holidays!
