

“The American Dream”

The phrase “The American Dream” is something we’ve all heard throughout our lives. But what exactly is the American Dream? The answer depends on who you ask.

For some, it’s owning a business. For others, it’s raising a family, getting an education, traveling the world, or simply having the freedom to pursue opportunities and build a better life.

One of the things I am most proud of is that I have spent the last several years working in an industry that helps people build their version of that dream.

I’ve been fortunate to be part of Kimal Lumber, a company that has been serving customers and SWFL for 45 years. Every day, we supply building materials to builders, contractors, remodelers, and homeowners who are creating something meaningful. For many families, that dream takes the shape of a home.

It may be a young couple purchasing their first house. It may be a family adding a room for a new child. It may be a retired couple finally building the home they’ve spent years planning. It may be replacing windows, adding a deck, remodeling a kitchen, or installing a new roof.

No, homeownership isn’t everyone’s dream, but for millions of Americans, it remains one of the most important goals they will ever achieve.

There is something special about being part of an industry that helps make those dreams possible.

Every contractor, carpenter, builder, supplier, electrician, plumber, roofer, and tradesperson contributes to that process. They aren’t simply constructing buildings. They’re helping families create memories, build security, and establish a place to call home.

When I think about America’s 250th birthday, I can’t help but think about the generations of hardworking people who literally built this country.

They built the homes.... They built the roads.... They built the schools.... They built the factories.... They built the communities where families live, work, and grow.

The building industry has long been one of the backbones of America, and I’m proud to work alongside customers who continue that tradition every day.

For 45 years, Kimal Lumber has played a small part in helping people achieve their dreams. And when you think about it, helping families build their future may be one of the most American things a company can do.

From our family to yours, Kimal Lumber wishes you a Happy Fourth of July and a very happy 250th birthday, America.
